WHAT'S WRONG WITH TEACHING?

Education is today reshaped through advanced teaching methods, advancements in technology and programs designed to make it available to as many persons as possible.

In a speech communicated at the American University of Beirut in Dubai, our founder, Dr. Fouad Makhzoumi talked about the changes in the world at various levels, especially in terms of teaching and training young people on how to move forward and find good jobs. He said that in the last years, education has been changing in so many ways so quickly that it is difficult to tell where this perplexity will head to. But in a comprehensive perception, he said, it is not hard to see that all these changes are facing one direction: increasing educational and vocational opportunities for the youth in the community.

Makhzoumi Foundation on its 20th anniversary recognizes the need to develop the skills of young people to be able to create new jobs. The founder addressed in his speech the major differences that have occurred many years ago when he graduated from the United States and came to the Gulf and Middle East. At the time that passed, there was huge need for engineers and doctors. Today, employment standards are opposite and pace is kept with the modern era based not only on education but on creativity.

Dear HIGHLIGHT readers, as you go over our February issue, please keep in mind that you can build your own success story when thinking about the youth who are in need for vocational training.
